Yale: Alumnus Named One of 100 Most Inspiring People in Health-care Industry

The Yale School of Public Health alumnus (MPH '95) Dr. Ryan Saadi, has been named one of the top 100 inspiring leaders in the life-sciences industry by the PharmaVOICE 100 in its July/August 2019 edition.

The PharmaVOICE 100 is an award program that recognizes most influential and inspiring people ranging across all sectors of the life-sciences industry.

With 25 years spent in leadership positions in hospital administration, managed care, and the pharmaceutical, biotechnology, and medical device industries, Dr. Saadi currently works as the Global Vice President and Head of Evidence, Market Access & Strategic Pricing Division at CSL Behring headquartered in Pennsylvania. He is committed to addressing challenges associated with patient access and seeks to bring positive changes in the life-sciences industry through collaboration and innovation. Dr. Saadi believes in motivating the younger generation with fulfilling assignments that play to their strengths.

In an interview with PharmaVOICE 100, he said, “we need to shift the mindset of all healthcare stakeholders from negotiation to collaboration; we are the manufacturers, doctors, health providers, government institutions, and payers who can do improve the lives of millions. Thus, we can and must collaborate to accomplish our common goal of improving health.”
